Description	A project that represents a full-time job with tasks, assignments and colleagues to prepare the young for the regular labor market
Which challenges did you face in this project and how did you overcome them. What approach was particularly successful and/or very difficult?	For some project participants tend to project to get their real work, this must be highlighted and broken in an early stage. There is a big challenge in creating and communicating a new work and attitude. There have been different views of, among other officials, politicians, parents and teachers about the project purpose and justification.  The main experience is of course always have the young in the center, build on what he wants and what goals he has. Then it's up to the youth developer to break them down into measurable and realistic goals. It is also important to document and show the statistics that are relevant and which demonstrates the success of the project.
Tips, hints What to keep in mind when organising a similar project?	That the young have the continuity of everyday life and that it is filled with labor-oriented activities throughout the project. It is required all the time for close cooperation between different authorities and when problems arise, it is important that these are lifted immediately. It is also important that the young have an interface and to pedagogical explain this to the young so that the focus is on community establishment, instead of being passed around in the different body systems. The above problems can be about a rule interpretation, different approaches, and unclear responsibilities

Benefits for <ul style="list-style-type: none"> * the young people * the youth worker * the organisation * the local community * the National Agency 	To relate to the business and project participants in a workplace is a new way of approaching the problem on young people's establishment difficulties in the labor market. Being in an environment that has similar requirements in the workplace, preparing youth for employment. The link to the outside world and the economy of the project is thus of great importance to all practice-related activities in the project. A Youth Bank is created in the project's auspices to facilitate the contact between project participants and entrepreneurs. The idea of the Bank is to create a sustainable partnership in which young people meet entrepreneurs.
Outcomes, impact
Something particular and/or remarkable you wish to highlight?	Young's future should be seen as young people's first step into the labor market and the content of activities based on youth's long-term goals - to establish themselves in the labor force.
