Civic Orientation and Social Integration

ABOUT THE PROJECT

Young people are increasingly now involved in 'alternative forms' of participation, including youth activism, community volunteering, online activism or youth social movements such as the climate activism movement. Related to this shift, youth civil society is also in a time of transition, moving from being based around structured hierarchical models of representation and participation to a more networked and diverse sector.

At the same time, many youth civil society organisations are also raising concerns about infringements on their freedom of association, assembly and expression, and what has been termed the 'shrinking space for civil society'.

Across Europe, it is now necessary to consider how our democratic societies recognise and support a range of approaches to youth participation and engage a diverse range of young people in democratic life. At the same time, it is still a concern that many young people feel disconnected from our democratic structures and institutions, and there is an ongoing need to enable young people to participate in democratic institutions and political structures both directly and indirectly. The Erasmus+ and European Solidarity Corps programmes further build upon this policy base by setting the objective of enhancing youth participation in democratic life.
