Le.Le. Learning Leadership

Training Course for community leaders, Austria 6-12 September 2012

Background Information

The LLL strategy aims at providing the necessary competences to people for being able to adapt to a changing world where new challenges may arise and new approaches are required to face them. Everyone is therefore called to be a learner and a leader able to see the changes and to identify the necessary competences to acquire or to perform in the new given situations. The TC Le.Le. will address learning as a non linear process that happens in a variety of contexts and situations and leadership as a generative attitude able to create a positive relationship with oneself and others. It is about personal development through an inner quest of leadership.

Aim and Objectives

The course aims at exploring the connection between leadership and learning as generative engines for self development and community leadership.

In particular it will look at how limiting beliefs can boycott the individual attitude towards learning and on how empowering beliefs can resource the individual in his/her quest for inner creativity for leadership. It will provide an opportunity for assessing the individual leadership and learning profile through an analysis of past experiences and their impact on our views to learning and leadership. It will offer also a coached experience of going out of the comfort zone to unleash the generative power of creating rapport with the others and to afford the experience of unlearning.

As a result of their participation in the course the participants will have identified their key questions to address in their quest for learning leadership as an ongoing non linear process.
