

Objectives

- Overcoming fears when young people communicate with others who do not speak their mother tongue.
- To appreciate the added value of linguistic and cultural diversity and to find elements of similarity between languages and cultures by emphasizing what unites us instead of what separates us.
- To develop a flexible communication capacity that can be adapted to different situations and contexts.
- To increase tolerance between cultures through inter-comprehension, understood as the phenomenon that occurs when people communicate with each other successfully speaking in their own language.
- Develop intercultural competence and find effective communication methods between different cultures and languages.

"A Europe of polyglots is not a Europe of people who speak many languages but, in the best of cases, people who can find themselves speaking their own language and understand each other's language" - (Umberto Eco)

In today's society, mobility of people, speed and ease of communication, access to information (globalization, in short) and contact with other languages and cultures that are already around us, without having to move, make necessary the development of a flexible, open, curious communication capacity... in which the knowledge of other languages and cultures becomes indispensable. In this youth exchange, participants will develop their inter-comprehension –their ability to communicate with people from different cultures speaking each one their own mother tongues, finding similarities and fostering tolerance.
