Project aims and objectives

The project focuses on two main areas of intervention that have been identified as high priority, given the current global situation, with the aim of providing youth workers with the theoretical and practical tools to best address the rising challenges of our time. The high priority areas identified concern the topics of migration and climate change, and more in detail: (i) the promotion of intercultural communication between people from different backgrounds, with particular regard to people on the move and their relationship with local communities in transit and destination countries; (ii) raising awareness on the topic of climate change and the impact it produces locally, with specific attention to the Balkan area.

Therefore, participants will acquire practical methods that foster relationships between people from different cultures through the implementation of targeted workshops on the topic of cross-cultural communication; in addition, they will gain the skills to structure and carry out workshops, activities and actions aimed at tackling the challenges of climate change.

The project is also meant to create an opportunity to discuss and share views, best practices and experiences on the topics analysed with the purpose of establishing an

Participants' profile

Youth workers, volunteers, inclusion workers, educators, psychologists and in general team members of NGOs willing to increase their knowledge about global climate change and their effects on local communities, and on the topic of cross-cultural communication in an increasingly multicultural world. Participants will also improve their skills for the organization and then implementation of awareness-raising actions on the issue of climate change, and to plan further projects in their communities that promote the values of multiculturalism and cross-cultural communication.

A sufficient level of English is required to ensure active participation in training and practical activities.

About IPSIA

IPSIA is an international NGO established in Italy in 1985. Our primary mission consists in building solidarity links between and within different communities through economic and social development, informal education and volunteering.

Our projects are mainly addresses to young people and their need for a brighter future, within a frame of strong commitment for sustainable development, civil coexistence and peacebuilding.

IPSIA currently operates in the Balkans and Africa and its activities are focused on the following thematic fields: Development Cooperation, Development Education, International Volunteering camp and Youth Mobility.

IPSIA is currently implementing a project of psycho-social intervention in Transit Centers in Bihać, Bosnia (started October 2018).

In this facilities, a team of animators and educators is providing psychological assistance, stress relief, animation, formal and informal education and sport activities to migrants.

Our work is consistently focused on a wide range targets, the principal being to help children, women, teenagers, men in the refugee camp by providing them with a choice of better quality time.

Since 2015 IPSIA is working in Bosnia Herzegovina in the area of National Park “Una” with environmental projects related to recycle, sustainable practices and education for young
